DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

1. The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter, which the applicant regards as his invention.

2. Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph, as being incomplete for omitting essential elements and structural cooperative relationships of elements, such omission amounting to a gap between the necessary elements and structural connections. See MPEP § 2172.01.

The claim recites only a single element in the "design support system," which is "a database." The claim then recites a group of functions associated with this database. The system has no element to receive the "data entered by said user." A "database" is normally a storage device, so that it is not understood how it performs calculations and generates outputs. There is no element recited to provide "said user" with "a result of the calculation."

An apparatus claim, which recites a "system", must recite all of the elements contained in the system and the structural cooperative relationships between these elements, which achieve the desired objective recited in the preamble. This claim recites a single element, and then describes results that a user can hope to obtain. It does not recite a group of interactive elements, which act in concert to perform one or more functions.

A definition is provided in the Microsoft Computer Dictionary as follows.

system- 1. An assembly of component parts linked together by some form of regulated interaction into an organized whole.

Appropriate correction and clarification is required.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 102

3. The following is a quotation of the appropriate paragraphs of 35 U.S.C. 102 that form the basis for the rejections under this section made in this Office action:

A person shall be entitled to a patent unless –

(e) the invention was described in a patent granted on an application for patent by another filed in the United States before the invention thereof by the applicant for patent, or on an international application by another who has fulfilled the requirements of paragraphs (1), (2), and (4) of section 371(c) of this title before the invention thereof by the applicant for patent.

The changes made to 35 U.S.C. 102(e) by the American Inventors Protection Act of 1999 (AIPA) and the Intellectual Property and High Technology Technical Amendments Act of 2002 do not apply when the reference is a U.S. patent resulting directly or indirectly from an international application filed before November 29, 2000. Therefore, the prior art date of the reference is determined under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) prior to the amendment by the AIPA (pre-AIPA 35 U.S.C. 102(e)).

4. Claims 1-9 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 102(e) as being anticipated by Hongu (6,829,743).

This rejection is made to the extent that the claims are understood.

In figure 8, Hongu discloses a design support system where a user 30 is connected through the Internet by means of web server 23 to the material system 10, 11. The material system can perform calculations on the design using computer 10 and store data in the materials database 11. The data is available to any user via web server 23.

Relevant Prior Art

Knowles (6540140) discloses a method and system for manufacturing bar code scanners, where an end user provides input to a web-enabled client computer system, which can interconnect with the manufacturer's web site. A database web based server supports the generation of optical engineering models in response to scanning requirements provided by the user. The web-based server is accessible to any user.

Zizzo (6578174) discloses a chip design system where a user workstation is coupled through the Internet to a web server, which has multiple application databases within connected to an application server, which provides all of the data, needed for the design of the semiconductor chip.

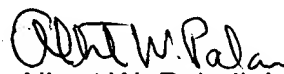

Dole (6634008) discloses a web-based system used for integrated circuit design which includes a customer work station connected through the internet to a methodology web server which in turns has access to an engineering work station to perform calculations and to various memory modules which store design data and data generated by the system.
